

Real competition

Congratulations to Grocery Commissioner Pierre van Heerden and to the Commerce Commission for finally getting their industry analysis sorted. The story Could this small food mart point the way to a new era? in Saturday's Post business pages gets straight to the heart of the issue of bringing competitive pressure to bear on the supermarket duopoly.

In both the grocery market and the electricity market, real competitive pressure on the giant monopolists can and should come from an empowered "fringe" of small operators, with wholesale supply nailed down and predation by the big corporates held in check.

The future lies with these mammals – not with the endless government attempts to recruit more dinosaurs to join the supermarket oligopoly.

Geoff Bertram, Karori

Congratulations to Grocery Commissioner Pierre van Heerden and to the Commerce Commission for finally getting their industry analysis sorted. The story “Could this small food mart point the way to a new era?” in Saturday’s Post Business Pages gets straight to the heart of the issue of bringing competitive pressure to bear on the supermarket duopoly. In both the grocery market and the electricity market, real competitive pressure on the giant monopolists can and should come from an empowered “fringe” of small operators, with wholesale supply nailed down and predation by the big corporates held in check. The future lies with these mammals – not with the endless Government attempts to recruit more dinosaurs to join the supermarket oligopoly.

Geoff Bertram
12 Cooper Street
Karori
Tel 021999758